OUR HISTORY

Founded by Tom and Jean Yawkey, the Yawkey Foundations have awarded more than 4,800 grants totaling $453 million to nonprofit organizations serving the people of New England and Georgetown County, South Carolina, since 1977.

For more information about Tom and Jean Yawkey and the Yawkey Foundations, please visit the Foundations' website at www.yawkeyfoundations.org.

OUR MISSION

The Trustees of the Yawkey Foundations are committed to continuing the legacy of Tom and Jean Yawkey by making significant and positive impacts on the quality of life for children, families, and the underserved in the areas that the Yawkeys called home: New England and Georgetown County, South Carolina.

Chairman and President's Message

Dear Friends,

It's impossible not to think of the Boston Red Sox whenever Tom or Jean Yawkey's names are mentioned. After all, they owned the iconic team for more than half a century. The legacy of the Yawkeys and the Red Sox are very much intertwined.

For those of us who were privileged to know Tom and Jean personally, for those of us who work at the Yawkey Foundations, and for those many individuals whose lives have been touched by their generosity, the names Tom and Jean Yawkey bring to mind a second legacy: deep and unwavering generosity to the people of Boston, New England, and Georgetown County, South Carolina.

Since 1977, through the work of their Yawkey Foundations, the Yawkeys have granted more than $450 million to hundreds of organizations, enriching the lives of thousands of people.

The Trustees of the Yawkey Foundations have sought to emulate Tom and Jean's tradition of giving – of walking alongside people and organizations as they work to address problems and alleviate suffering. We work to continue Tom and Jean's legacy by supporting the causes and interests that were so important to them.

When we remember the Yawkeys, we remember Tom Yawkey's actions after learning that a Red Sox scout's child had significant disabilities: he ensured the child had access to a supportive school. We think about Jean Yawkey taking an interest in an employee's child who was deaf and then quietly researching schools and paying the tuition so that the child would have the support he needed to be successful. We reflect on Tom and Jean's long association with Dr. Sidney Farber and the Jimmy Fund, and the commitments they made that helped transform Dr. Farber's laboratory at Boston Children's Hospital into what is now the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, one of the world's leading cancer institutes. We remember the Yawkeys' work with Tara Hall Home for Boys in Georgetown, South Carolina, and their instrumental role in the establishment of the Family Inn in Brookline, a home for families whose loved ones were receiving medical care at nearby hospitals.

These are some of the stories – of quiet philanthropy that made a difference in people's lives – that the Trustees of the Yawkey Foundations use to guide the Foundations' mission and grant making.

This approach gives us the opportunity to see and understand challenges that may not make the headlines. One area of special focus by both the Yawkeys and the Yawkey Foundations has been supporting individuals and families with disabilities. Since 2002, the Foundations have committed more than $10 million to this initiative. Through this work, we have come to know the many organizations and families who are struggling with the significant reduction in public funding that happens when children with disabilities turn 22 years old. Every family, regardless of circumstances, wants the same things for their child – to contribute to the community through employment or volunteerism, to live in a supportive environment, and to have a network of peers. We recognize that providing these opportunities for children with disabilities as they age into adulthood is no easy task, but we owe it to all of these children and their families to provide them with the resources to ensure that they continue to have enriching lives.

There are many organizations that work with children with disabilities, particularly as they age into adulthood. In this year's Grants Report we highlight four of them: Cardinal Cushing Centers, Melmark New England, Nashoba Learning Group, and Perkins School for the Blind. Each organization is trying to tackle the daunting task of preparing young adults with disabilities and their families for life after age 22. In all of these organizations there are dedicated staff members who are committed to creating fulfilling, happy, and successful days for these young adults. We meet them working in gardens, art studios, greenhouses, a radio station, and kitchens. We hear about their trips to museums, malls, grocery stores, and restaurants. We witness first-hand the commitment these organizations and their staff members have to enriching the lives of their students. We are honored to provide some of the support to help ensure their lives are as full and meaningful as possible.

We hope that you enjoy reading about these wonderful organizations. The Trustees of the Yawkey Foundations are honored to carry on Tom and Jean Yawkey's tradition of giving by making an impact on so many worthy organizations, which in turn have made life better for thousands of deserving people throughout our community. This is the Tom and Jean Yawkey we knew and we celebrate.

THE YAWKEY LEGACY 1977 – 2017

$453 MILLION / 4,822 GRANTS AWARDED

Enriching Lives for Adults with Disabilities

For many young men and women, turning 22 is a time of possibility – it can mean graduating from college, starting a job or moving out on one’s own – generally beginning life as an adult.

But as Krista approached her 22nd birthday, her parents Tim and Nadine Mahoney were dreading the day.

Krista is on the autism spectrum. Since the age of 12, she had attended Melmark New England, a school with locations in Andover and Lawrence, Massachusetts, that provides services for students ages 3 to 22 with autism, as well as other intellectual and developmental disabilities and severe challenging behaviors.

In 2008, Krista turned 22. At the time, Melmark did not have a program for adults, so Krista had to leave the school and her parents had to find services elsewhere.

“Melmark prepared us,” said Tim. “When Krista was 18 years old, the staff and teachers started talking to us about the transition to adult services. Quite honestly, it was scary.”

This uncertainty is a feeling many parents of children with disabilities in Massachusetts deal with when their children reach their 22nd birthday. Before turning 22, children’s educational needs are an entitlement under the Individuals with Disability Education Act and therefore the responsibility

MEET KRISTA

Krista loves to shop and enjoys art.

She is in the adult day program at Melmark.

She lives with her friends in one of Melmark's residency programs.

She is 31 and will need support for the rest of her life.

of the Massachusetts Department of Elementary and Secondary Education. After age 22, support for young adults with disabilities falls under the direction of the Department of Developmental Services whose funding stream is limited and therefore the financial resources and in turn services are often severely reduced.

For those with more significant—and expensive—needs, this change can be of great concern to families. Some refer to this sudden change as “falling off a cliff.”

“The need for adults so far outweighs what’s provided,” said Larry Cancro, whose daughter Lisa also aged out of the student program at Melmark. “None of these kids did anything to hurt themselves. They were born needing everyone else’s help.”

There is currently no accurate way to measure the number of individuals in the state with complex medical and behavioral needs, such as autism. For those families, it can be a draining process, physically, emotionally and financially. Thankfully, there are programs, people and organizations that are working tirelessly to close the gap and continue to help individuals with disabilities live fulfilling lives.

The Yawkey Foundations have a long history – much of it dating back to Tom and Jean Yawkey’s personal giving – of supporting schools and organizations that provide educational services to children with disabilities. Through that work and the relationships built over time, the Foundations have come to realize the challenges faced by families whose children have reached age 22, as well as the organizations that support them. This is a critical gap that needs to be addressed.

The supports that have been established to ensure a quality of life need to be continued. Expert, highly trained staff can ensure that adults have access to jobs and can obtain the highest possible level of independence in the community.”

President and CEO of
Melmark New England

MEET ROBERT

Robert is 25 years old and has autism.

He loves to exercise and save money.

He works part-time at Whole Foods with staff from Nashoba Learning Group supporting him.

He wants to own an RV someday and travel the world.

“We fundraise, in part, to supplement the adult services, because the cost of care exceeds the amount of money available to help the adults Melmark has always been committed to serve. Melmark’s commitment is for those adults with complex autism who have found success at Melmark. We make sure the most vulnerable in our community are served well,” said Helena Maguire, Executive Director of Melmark.

Enriching Days Through Supportive Employment and Programs

Robert wants to travel.

The 25-year-old works part-time at Whole Foods and his dream is to buy an RV like the one he sees on his favorite TV show.

Desire to travel may seem like a fairly common dream, but it wasn’t always a possibility for Robert. Robert has autism and is a participant in the adult program at Nashoba Learning Group (NLG) in Billerica, Massachusetts.

NLG was founded in 2002 to help children aged 3 to 22 with autism. The founders were a group of parents of children with autism and clinicians, including President and Clinical Director, Elizabeth Martineau.

As her son and his classmates at NLG approached their 22nd birthdays, it was clear that they would continue to need robust supportive programming if they were to be successful as adults. Unfortunately, they were about to lose funding for their services.

“We were working so hard to help develop functioning, independent adults but we knew they would need continued support after they turned 22,” said Lauren Savioli, Program Director at NLG.

The Yawkey Foundations have supported NLG since its founding with grants totaling $1.1 million. In 2013, with support from the Foundations, NLG created and expanded a program to serve adults over the age of 22, which includes people like Robert.

950: The number of students with disabilities in the special education system that the State of Massachusetts projects will be newly eligible for adult services in 2017.

(Source: Massachusetts Development Disabilities Council)

Adult programs for individuals with disabilities who have more intensive needs require highly qualified and trained staff and require significant resources to allow these adults to function successfully in the program and in the community. NLG currently has 34 members in its adult program. While the program does receive state funding to support these individuals, the funding gap to provide the intensity of services needed is $25,000 a year per member. For some individuals and organizations this gap is even higher. And unlike a school age program that has a graduation date, organizations such as NLG will be caring for some of these individuals for the rest of their lives.

“When you turn 22, you don’t stop learning,” said Savioli. “You can still advance your skills and advance your life and still work towards becoming an independent, successful adult.”

Providing services for adults with disabilities and more intensive needs can be an expensive proposition, and organizations that serve this population lean heavily on foundations such as the Yawkey Foundations to make ends meet.

Enriching Lives Through Employment Opportunities

At Cardinal Cushing Centers, just off Route 53 in Hanover, Massachusetts there are quaint shops run by students in the school program and frequented by locals. There is a greenhouse with a small chicken coop. Further back from the road, the smell of fresh baked goods wafts out from a café. There is also a gift shop where items created by students and adults are sold.

The need for adults so far outweighs what's provided. None of these kids did anything to hurt themselves. They were born needing everyone else's help.”

Larry Cancro,
Melmark New England
Parent

MEET SOPHIE

Sophie turns 22 in May 2018.

She has attended Cardinal Cushing Centers since elementary school.

She works part-time at a sports-entertainment complex.

She understands a change is coming.

Jody Nash knew the school would be the perfect environment for her daughter Sophie. Sophie has cognitive disabilities and when her family visited Cardinal Cushing there was an instant connection.

“When we were walking around, not only did the students stop and say hi, but every staff member did also,” said Jody. “There are staff who have been here for 30 and 35 years. To me, the campus seems more like a caring neighborhood. People truly want to be here.”

Sophie is now 21 and Jody is bracing for the transition that will come as a result of her graduation from Cardinal Cushing. Sophie’s family has secured her a safe, stable living situation, but Jody knows there will be a lot of trial and error as her daughter gets used to the adult world.

While Cardinal Cushing does have an adult program for students after they turn 22, not every individual they support as a student will receive funding to continue on as an adult. Regardless of their funding situation, Cardinal Cushing works very hard to ensure that its students and their families are prepared for their transition. The organization is in the midst of a capital campaign that will result in a brand new Marketplace Building along Route 53. The Yawkey Foundations supported this effort with a $500,000 grant. Once completed, the new building will feature a café, thrift store and gift shop —which will provide job training and employment opportunities for students. The program is designed to prepare students for paid employment opportunities with businesses in the community. The hope is to turn the quaint shops into vibrant, profitable businesses. Adults with disabilities will staff the shops in the afterschool hours.

While individuals served by institutions like Cardinal Cushing, Melmark and NLG have a wide range of capabilities, the importance of these community connections is paramount for each of the organizations.

“All parents want their child to feel proud and successful and accomplished. And I think for each family that success looks slightly different,” said NLG’s Savioli.

Enriching Lives with Stable Residency Programs

Krista's parents felt she was safe in the group home where she was placed after aging out of Melmark's school-aged program. Over time, however, she began to lose some of the life skills she had learned. She also didn't get to go out as often as she was used to (Krista loves to go shopping).

"She's the type of person who likes being around people," said her mother, Nadine. "We saw a change in her behavior almost immediately."

The Yawkey Foundations have supported Melmark for many years and in 2016 provided a $2 million grant to support the construction of four residences for Melmark students. In addition, the Foundations have been supportive as the organization worked to establish a solution for their students as they aged out of the school program.

Eventually Krista's parents were able to enroll her into Melmark's adult residency program, which opened in 2012, followed by their adult day program in 2015.

"Krista comes home from time to time," added Tim. "She's happy to come home, but she's usually even happier to go back mostly because all of her friends are there. At age 31, people don't necessarily want to live with their parents and Krista is no different."

"When someone turns 22, autism doesn't end," said Rita Gardner, President and CEO of Melmark. "The supports that have been established to ensure a quality of life need to be continued. Expert, highly trained staff can ensure that adults have access to jobs and can obtain the highest possible level of independence in the community."

The adult program provides Lisa, Krista and their peers with opportunities – and a stable, nurturing environment where they can thrive.

We fundraise, in part, to supplement the adult services, because the cost of care exceeds the amount of money available to help the adults.”

Executive Director of Melmark New England

MEET NICK

Nick starred as the Tin Man in the Wizard of Oz at his high school.

He has skied with New England Disabled Sports.

His favorite programs at Perkins are theater week and Camp Abilities.

He will graduate from high school in June and start college in the fall.

“Institutions like Melmark make a big difference, people who care make a big difference,” said Larry. “And what I’m finding is, Lisa has a good life. Lisa does a lot of things. She’s happy.”

Enriching Lives Beyond the Classroom

While the cliff that young people with autism encounter at 22 can be massively disruptive, the transition from school-age to adult services affects many young people with other disabilities.

Perkins School for the Blind in Watertown, Massachusetts, provides a number of enrichment programs designed both to help visually impaired students from infancy to age 22 prepare for the working world, and to give them access to new experiences. For many years, the Yawkey Foundations have supported Perkins’ Outreach Courses with grants of more than $500,000. These courses include activities such as health and wellness programs, cooking classes and working at a radio station.

“Often these courses bring students who wouldn’t typically come to Perkins for school but have a need to be engaged with other students who are blind or visually impaired,” said Ed Bosso, Perkins’ Superintendent and Executive Director of Educational Programs.

Every student is expected to leave high school with a strong grasp of core subjects such as math, language arts, science, and history. But in order to eventually live and work independently, students who are blind or visually impaired learn an additional set of skills that Perkins calls the “expanded core curriculum” — skills such as social interaction, career education, and communication modes such as Braille.

Nick, a senior in high school, has participated in a number of Perkins' Outreach Courses, including theater and Camp Abilities Boston, which is part of a national program for students who are visually impaired to explore athletics through adaptations that make many sports accessible.

Nick also participated in a five-week course that focused on life skills, giving the 17-year-old a boost of confidence. Nick is on a college-bound track and hopes to one day attend law school. Many of the skills taught through workforce prep programs will be applicable throughout his entire life.

"These programs have really helped me gain confidence in my mobility skills," said Nick.

Despite the young man's confidence and capability, his mother Allison is still concerned.

"I'm a little nervous about what happens when he graduates," she said. "The programs my son has participated in at Perkins have given him invaluable experience."

Honoring a Legacy

Throughout their lives, Tom and Jean Yawkey never forgot the community's most vulnerable citizens and understood their challenges and needs. This understanding guided the Yawkeys' philanthropic leadership with many organizations throughout Massachusetts, New England, and Georgetown, South Carolina. For eight decades, Tom and Jean Yawkey – and now the Yawkey Foundations – have supported organizations such as Cardinal Cushing, Melmark, Nashoba Learning Group, Perkins, and many others to provide enriching programs for thousands of individuals to help them live fulfilling lives. This is Tom and Jean Yawkey's legacy, a legacy that continues today.

When you turn 22, you don't stop learning. You can still advance your skills and advance your life and still work towards becoming an independent, successful adult.”

Lauren Savioli,
Program Director at Nashoba Learning Group

Tom Yawkey Wildlife Center: Research Partnership with Clemson University

Located on more than 24,000 acres in Georgetown County, South Carolina, the Tom Yawkey Wildlife Center includes miles of sandy beaches, maritime forests, longleaf pine uplands, marshes, and wetlands that serve as a wildlife refuge and natural habitat for hundreds of animal and plant species. As envisioned by Tom Yawkey, the Wildlife Center is fully funded by the Yawkey Foundations and serves as an outdoor laboratory and research center and educational research center used by biologists, researchers, and students from across the country. In 2014, the Wildlife Center and Clemson University entered into a research partnership that emphasizes natural resource and wildlife conservation as key components of their missions.

Key Highlights

- Established and continued 10 separate wildlife research projects.
- Created or maintained over 30 collaborative research and education partnerships.
- Published 23 peer-reviewed scientific research articles.

EDUCATION

In 2017, the Yawkey Foundations:

- Provided nearly $1.7 million in scholarship and capital renovation support to middle and secondary schools providing educational opportunities for underserved students.
- Welcomed 33 new students to the Yawkey Scholars Program which has provided more than $11 million in tuition and support to nearly 300 underserved college students since 2005.
- Awarded more than 100 nonprofit internship fellowships for underserved college students from Boston University, Yale University, Bentley University and Merrimack College to work at local nonprofit organizations.

Year Up Educational Programs for Youth Ages 18 to 24

Year Up Greater Boston delivers an employment training program coupled with a corporate internship that prepares underserved young adults, ages 18 to 24, for entry-level roles with leading employers, as well as their pursuit of continued higher education. The Yawkey Foundations have supported Year Up since 2004 with grants totaling $250,000.

Key Highlights

- Year Up operates in 21 cities nationwide and has served 19,500 young adults since its inception in 2001.
- Year Up Greater Boston has served 4,280 students since 2001.
- 88% of graduates are employed and/or enrolled in postsecondary education within four months of completing the program.
- Employed Year Up graduates earn an average of $18 per hour — the equivalent of $36,000 per year.

Tufts Medical Center: Patient Navigation Program

Located in Boston's Chinatown, Tufts Medical Center is a 415-bed academic hospital. Since its founding in 1796, Tufts has provided medical relief to underserved populations and continues to serve a high-number of patients of Chinese origin. With the support of a $300,000 grant from the Yawkey Foundations, Tufts designed a patient navigation program for Chinese patients who are receiving cancer treatment to assist with patient understanding and adherence to medical prescriptions and care.

Key Highlights

- Patient Navigators play a critical role as medical liaisons between patients of Chinese origin and the cancer care team.
- Bilingual signage, appointment sheets and medication calendars to improve patient understanding of treatment and follow-up.
- Over the past year, the program served 158 patients in more than 1,100 visits, a 50% increase over the prior year.

HUMAN SERVICES

In 2017, the Yawkey Foundations:

- Celebrated the ground breaking of the Dr. Lucy Sewall Center for Acute Treatment Services at the Dimock Center, supported in part by a $2.5 million grant.
- Provided $1.6 million in funding for food and shelter programs serving the most basic needs of individuals in our community.
- Granted more than $1 million to organizations providing mentoring and supportive services to youth-at-risk throughout the City of Boston.

Youth Enrichment Services: Outdoor Adventure and Enrichment Program for Underserved Youth

Youth Enrichment Services (YES) provides year-round opportunities for outdoor and enrichment programs for underserved youth. A variety of program offerings includes skiing and outdoor adventures and track and field. All outdoor programs are coupled with mentoring and engagement programs designed to help Boston teens reach their full potential and achieve success. Topics covered include leadership training, girls' leadership, college preparation, and job training. The Yawkey Foundations have supported YES since 2002, with grants totaling $1,125,000.

Key highlights

- Served 1,690 youth last year.
- Over the last five years, 100% of YES teens graduated from high school and enrolled in college.
- 100% of young people in YES' career preparation program completed the program with a job, internship, or summer academic plans at any given time.
